Bulger victim's son to corrupt agent: 'Shove it'

Apology not accepted. Son of alleged victim Michael Donohue reacts to disgraced FBI agent John Morris' tearful apology for providing information that ultimately got Donohue killed. Monetary motivation. Morris admitted to taking bribes from Bulger and his gang as a supervisor in Boston's FBI office. Man killed by commuter rail in Beverly

A man was struck and killed at 12:30 p.m. yesterday by a Newburyport/Rockport commuter rail in Beverly.

The victim, who police said was in his 40s, was trespassing on the tracks when the inbound train struck him just south of the Beverly Depot. He was taken to Beverly Hospital with serious injuries and was later pronounced dead.

About 150 passengers were on board the train and service was halted for the police investigation. METRO

Family of alleged Bulger victim rejects FBI apology

Whitey trial. A corrupt FBI agent apologized to the families.

A corrupt FBI supervisor tried his best to hold back tears as he sat on a witness stand yesterday and apologized to the families of James "Whitey" Bulger's alleged murder victims for his involvement in their deaths.

John Morris, who admitted to taking bribes from Bulger as a supervisor in Boston's FBI office, was emotional during his third day of testimony.

During cross examination by Bulger's lawyer, Hank Brennan, Morris said it was a "spontaneous" action when he told Bulger's corrupt FBI handler John Connolly in 1982 that gang member Brian Halloran was cooperating with authorities. About four weeks later, Morris said he learned that Halloran, along with another man who had given him a ride, had been gunned down.

New testimony

Drug dealer says Bulger had his back

An admitted South Boston cocaine dealer testified for the government yesterday and said that Bulger had his back.

Joseph Tower said that during the 1980s Bulger told him to go into business with another man and that he wouldn't have any problems. Tower testified that one time some deadbeat drug customers had held his brother hostage, so he reached out to his partner who met with Bulger, and Bulger handled the situation and got his brother back.

When asked to point out Bulger in court, Tower jokingly looked around the room then pointed to Bulger and said, "How you doing?"

Tommy Donahue, son of alleged Whitey Bulger victim Michael Donahue, previously spoke to the media about his displeasure with the handling of the Bulger case. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

"I don't ask for your forgiveness, but I do want to express my sincere apology for things that I may have done and things that I didn't do," Morris said. "Not a day in my life has gone by where I haven't thought about this. ... I'm truly sorry. I do not ask for forgiveness. That's too much. But I do acknowledge it publicly."

The man who gave Halloran a ride that night was Michael Donahue, whose family has attended dozens of Bulger's court appearances. Son Tommy Donahue said he didn't care for the apology. "I thought it was a complete joke. He can actually take his apology and shove it. We know we want Whitey Bulger to go to jail, but we have to rely on Whitey's lawyers to get us the truth? That's appalling. The government should be getting us the truth."

Bulger claims he paid Morris for information, rather than giving information to Morris.

Assault suspect confident in his case

Barthel / SUFFOLK COUNTY DA

A man accused of sexually assaulting a 21-year-old unconscious woman on the Boston Esplanade on Sunday allegedly had some choice words for law enforcement during his arrest.

Joseph Barthel, 49, who claimed residence at a Boston shelter but lived in Waltham as recently as February, allegedly told troopers who interrupted the apparent assault, "You didn't see [expletive] and you can't prove [expletive] either. I beat that rape case and my lawyer will beat this [expletive] case, too."

He was ordered held on $100,000 cash bail at his arraignment yesterday.

Police said they saw Barthel lying on top of the woman near the Community Boating dock while on patrol about 1 a.m. Emergency medical technicians were able to rouse the woman, who said that she knew Barthel only as a friend of a friend with whom they had been drinking earlier in the day. She told the troopers that she had passed out as Barthel was trying to kiss her.

Barthel was accused of raping a homeless woman with whom he had been drinking in October 2012, but the case did not go to trial because attempts to locate that victim were unsuccessful.

The troopers who interrupted Barthel's alleged assault Sunday were part of heightened patrols meant to enhance security in the Esplanade, where there have been a string of recent assaults.

Hooked. Police arrest alleged boat thief who claimed to be 'Peter Pan'

A man who identified himself as "Peter Pan" was arraigned on boat theft charges yesterday after state police responded to a 911 call Saturday from the vessel's owner.

Derek Ramsay, 27, of Topsham, Maine was charged with larceny, breaking and entering into a boat, and furnishing a false name for allegedly stealing a 28-foot Chaparral from Poorman's Landing.

The boat's owner said he was in his dingy about 11:45 a.m. when a man entered the vessel then sped off along the Charles River toward the Museum of Science.

Ramsay allegedly claimed that the boat was his, and when police asked his name, allegedly replied, "Peter." When asked his last name, he allegedly replied, "Pan."

After his arrest, he was taken to the hospital for "erratic behavior," police said. METRO

Aquarium's Giant Ocean Tank officially reopens

Myrtle the turtle enjoys a dip inside the new tank. / GETTY IMAGES

A whole new world. Caribbean Coral Reef renovation cost $17M and has doubled the number of aquatic animals on display.

After 10 months of renovations, the New England Aquarium officially reopened its largest exhibit, the Giant Ocean Tank, yesterday.

The four-story, 200,000-gallon tank is now home to more than 2,000 different aquatic animals from 140 different species — more than double the amount the original tank held.

Visitors will soon have the chance to interact with the animals up close, learning about all of the species and feeding them under the guidance of divers and educators.

One thing visitors are unlikely to see is the larger predators dining on the smaller species in the shared tank.

Aaron Nathan, an educator with the aquarium, said that the fish rarely eat each other.

"We write down how much we feed them on a daily basis to make sure that they get the food they need so that they don't [cannibalize] the other fish," he said, adding that some of the animals are placed separately.

Stuck up. Boston ranked third snobbiest US city after San Francisco, NYC

Somewhere in Beacon Hill a blue-blooded Bostonian with a PhD in cartography is choking on his blueberry bliss rooibos tea, flinging his copy of Travel + Leisure magazine down on his Brazilian Rosewood desk and bellowing, "How dare they!"

That's because the magazine recently named Boston the third snobbiest city in the U.S., coming in behind swanky San Francisco and hoity-toity New York City.

Cities were judged by arts and culture, high-end retail shops, eco-consciousness, coffeehouses and, of course, education.

"In this college town steeped in history, visitors may detect a certain air of superiority: After all, the locals rank near the top for their Ivy League–worthy brains and for supporting old-school culture, such as the symphony," wrote author Katrina Brown Hunt.

MORGAN ROUSSEAU

Snobs / FUSE

The others

San Francisco came in first thanks to its fine dining, ethnic cuisine, galleries and pricey boutiques.

- New York grabbed second place due to its theater and arts scene, as well as its fashion sense.
- Other cities to make the list include Minneapolis; Santa Fe, N.H.; Seattle; Chicago; Providence, R.I.; and Washington, D.C.

Independence Day. State police urge visitors to help with July 4 safety

With hundreds of thousands of people expected to flood the banks of the Charles River, the Esplanade and Hatch Shell for July 4, state police urged visitors to work with authorities to make the celebrations safe.

"We want this Fourth of July to be a happy, safe and joyous occasion for everyone," said Col. Tim Alben. "We want you to work with us to make this the safest and best Fourth of July in memory."

In a video posted on YouTube yesterday, Alben urged visitors to the Esplanade to report suspicious activity to police through the agency's new text-a-tip effort. Visitors can text "Boston4" to 67283 with the info.

The July 4 celebration on the Charles River will be the city's largest public event to take place since the Marathon bombings.

US seeks to calm European outrage over alleged spying

EU. Policymakers said talks on a free-trade deal should be frozen until the U.S. clarified its activities.

President Barack Obama tried yesterday to reassure European allies affronted by reports of U.S. spying by suggesting all the world's intelligence services were involved in finding out the thinking of opponents and allies alike.

The European Union has demanded the United States explain a report in a German magazine that Washington was spying on the bloc, saying that, if true, such surveillance was shocking.

French President Francois Hollande called the alleged action intolerable, saying it could hinder U.S. relations with Paris and the EU. "We want this to stop fast," he said.

Obama promised to supply all the information requested by European allies regarding the spying allegations, which he said Washington was still evaluating.

"Every intelligence service, not just ours, but every European intelligence service, every Asian intelligence service, wherever there's an intelligence service, here's one thing they're going to be doing: They're going to be trying to understand the world better and what's going on in world capitals around the world from sources that aren't available through the New York Times or NBC News," Obama said.

Secretary of State John Kerry, who is in Brunei for an Asian security conference, said the United States was not alone in using "lots of activities" to safeguard its security.

Snowden breaks silence to threaten new US leaks

Edward Snowden has broken his silence for the first time since he fled to Moscow eight days ago to say he remains free to make new disclosures about U.S. spying activity.

In a letter to Ecuador, Snowden said the United States was illegally persecuting him for revealing its electronic surveillance program, PRISM. He also thanked Ecuador for helping him get to Russia and for examining his asylum request.

"No matter how many more days my life contains, I remain dedicated to the fight for justice in this unequal world. If any of those days ahead realize a contribution to the common good, the world will have the principles of Ecuador to thank," part of Snowden's text read, according to a translation. REUTERS

Russian, US leaders tell security services to end standoff

The Russian and U.S. presidents have told their security services to resolve the standoff over Edward Snowden, Russia's RIA news agency quoted an official as saying yesterday.

RIA cited Nikolai Patrushev, secretary of Russian President Vladimir Putin's advisory Security Council, as saying it would not be easy for the FBI and Russia's FSB to agree over the fate of Snowden.

Putin has ignored calls to extradite Snowden to face espionage charges in the United States. Another Russian official, presidential aide Yuri Ushakov, said Putin had not discussed the situation with President Barack Obama.

Demi Lovato: Barney saved my life

Demi Lovato has extracted way more meaning from the big purple dinosaur she used to work under (that would be Barney) than I ever did as a kid.

"Looking back, there was a connection, probably between any kid who's ever sang that song to Barney, a little place in a child's heart, a void that could be filled," she says in the newest issue of Cosmopolitan. "And maybe Barney fills it. I guess subliminally, I did have a relationship with this figure that was saving my life in a way."

Kids, this is what rampant drug abuse does to your brain: tricks you into developing friendships with ginormous talking purple dinosaurs. Yet another reason to just say no.

Ruben Studdard joins 'The Biggest Loser'

Almost a decade ago, Ruben Studdard sang to us that he was "sorry for 2004," and now it looks like he's also feeling a little sorry for packing on the pounds. Indeed, the second "American Idol" champ is set to join the weight-loss juggernaut this fall, People reports. Studdard says his previous attempts at curtailing his obesity — he rang in at 455 pounds in 2006 — haven't gotten him very far before and that he's looking to get healthy so he lowers his risk for high blood pressure, diabetes and heart problems.

As long as he still keeps on enough meat for me to keep referring to him by his old nickname, "the velvet teddy bear," I'm all for it. But please, if you can, Ruben, try not to go the Jonah Hill route — we all know how that turned out. And let's hope he gets back into singing, because I'm still not forgiving him for "Sorry 2004."

Ryan Guldemond, center, doesn't take music too seriously. / PRESS HERE PUBLICITY

If the only Mother Mother song you've ever heard is their chipper single, "Bright Idea," which was featured in a Kraft Cheese commercial, you might get the idea that they're a sugar-poppy outfit. You'd be mistaken.

"A lot of people don't necessarily hear it, and they come out with this misguided idea that we're a happy band with a happy message," says front man Ryan Guldemond. "Because it's not totally common for people to listen too closely to lyrics these days."

Not to listen closely would be a disservice to both listener and musician, as it's the complex (and sometimes head-scratching) lyricism that makes this band so interesting. But Guldemond says while he's prone to verbose songwriting, there is something to be said for brevity.

"You do have to be very immediate in today's popular-music genre," he says. "And it's almost harder to be simple and immediate with something than it is to take your time. It's harder to cut to the chase than it is to be long-winded."

To cut to the chase when it comes to his craft, Guldemond's philosophy is clear.

"If there's anything not to take too seriously, it's music," he says when asked about writing a song specifically for commercial use. "It's a fun little challenge to write from that place, because usually it comes out how it comes out — from the heart, or however you want to put it. But this was more of an expression within parameters. I don't necessarily see music as something that has to be sacred and authentic at all times."

Guldemond says the one moment where it is especially important for him to be authentic is when he takes the stage.

"It is the one little window during the day where you can let loose a bit," he says. "I find it curious when bands on tour, when they play, they look excruciatingly bored or something. Not to say that they need to be animated — there can be a lot of passion in stillness. But there's this one little window where something exceptional can happen."

When you need a break from your Orlando vacation

Review. Go on this family trip without losing your mind.

You finally decided to take the kids to Walt Disney World! But if you are like most parents, you will only be able to take so many rounds of "It's A Small World" and so many photos of adults dressed as princesses before you start to feel the magic wearing off fast. Fortunately, there is a way to maintain your sanity while keeping your kids happy.

If you want your home-away-from-home base to be in close proximity to the Magic Kingdom, try the Wyndham Grand Orlando Resort Bonnet Creek. This 2-year-old flagship Wyndham Grand property is conveniently located within the gates of Walt Disney World and provides complimentary private shuttle service to the theme parks. Situated on a 10-acre lake, there are countless features catering to kids, both big and small.

Your children will find it nearly impossible to utter the words "I'm bored" and mean it when they have the choice of floating on a lazy river, playing putt-putt, wasting quarters in the arcade or partaking in one of the many daily children's activities the resort offers; even the littlest ones can enjoy splashing around in the zero-entry swimming pool. And after wearing themselves out, they can pass out in your family-friendly bunk-bed room.

To reward yourself for hours of standing in line to ride Under the Sea: Journey of the Little Mermaid, book a massage at Blue Harmony Spa (don't forget to finish off your visit with the Experience Shower). If you're the active type, guests of the resort have access to the Rees Jones-designed championship golf course at the nearby Waldorf Astoria Golf Club. And if gluttony is more your thing, you've lucked out. The resort offers a spectrum of dining options, from the award-winning deep blu seafood grille (cedar-baked swordfish, anyone?) to Back Bay Pool Bar & Grill, the open-air restaurant that will dropkick you into a food coma with its Krispy Kreme Donut Burger and Fried Pickles with chipotle ranch dressing.

Something tells me we're not in Boston anymore. / JANET CHOI, METRO

Sea World Orlando/ Discovery Cove

If you have time for a non-Disney outing and are craving a dose of reality amidst all the fantasy, Sea World Orlando and its sister park, Discovery Cove, are unique places to bring the kids. Sea World's newest attraction, Antarctica: Empire of the Penguin, begins with a ride component that follows the adventures of Puck, a hatchling, and ends with entry into an icy cold room full of ... yep, penguins.

Turn the tables on the faithful

Re: 'Separation of state and wedding bells' (Metro, July 1) There is a separation of church and state, which is exactly why the state is involved with the institution of marriage. Marriage originated as a social, legal union — not merely a religious ceremony. With that in mind, how about the people of the state keep "marriage" and the people of the church can have "religious unions"?

Revolution back in town

The New England Revolution (5-5-6, 21 points) return to Gillette Stadium for the first time in nearly a month Saturday (7:30 p.m.) to host the San Jose Earthquakes.

MLB power rankings | by Ryan Hannable

No. 1

Pirates (51-30)

Finally there is a new No. 1 team as the Pirates jumped to the top, riding a nine-game win streak. Their pitching has been outstanding in this stretch, limiting opponents to three runs or fewer in seven of the nine wins, which makes sense considering they lead the National League in ERA with a 3.13 mark. It's a relatively easy week for the new No. 1 as they host the Phillies and then take on the Cubs.

No. 2

Red Sox (50-34)

After slipping out of the top five last week, the Red Sox quickly picked things up this past week. Although a lot of their wins aren't the prettiest, they continue to find different ways to pull out victories.

No. 3

Cardinals (49-32)

The Cards dropped out of the top spot for the first time in a long time. They've dropped six of their last eight as their offense sputters.

No. 4

Braves (48-34)

The Braves continue to get good pitching and thus maintain their strong lead over the rest of the NL East.

No. 5

Rangers (48-34)

A 4-2 week maintained the Rangers' lead in the AL West but the A's are still right behind them, trailing by only a half game. Texas' pitching has stepped up, posting two shutouts last week.

No. 6

Athletics (48-35)

Oakland is third in the AL in team ERA at 3.76 and fifth in runs per game at 4.67. They held their own against the Reds and Cards last week.

No. 7

Orioles (47-36)

The Orioles have now won four in a row after sweeping the Yankees over the weekend and remain in second place in what has become a highly competitive AL East. Their offense continues to lead the way; going into Monday, they are second in the AL in runs with 410, trailing only the AL East-leading Red Sox. The O's see the White Sox and Yankees this week.

No. 8

Reds (46-36)

Cincy fell out of the top five this week as its offense has been lacking, scoring three runs or fewer in seven of its last nine. Not coincidentally, they've lost seven of their last nine.

No. 9

Indians (44-38)

Cleveland made the biggest jump this week, moving up six spots. The Indians offense has averaged nine runs in their past four games.

No. 10

Tigers (43-37)

Losers of five of their last six, the Tigers have allowed the Indians to get back into contention for the AL Central lead. Although their pitching has remained consistent, their offense hasn't lived up to their 4.95 runs per game average as they scored three runs or fewer in their last three losses. The Tigers are now on a difficult eight-game road trip.

Chiarelli rips on immature Seguin

Tyler Seguin needs to grow up, according to Boston Bruins management.

"He's got to become more of a professional," B's general manager Peter Chiarelli said this past weekend. "You know what? I can say that about a lot of 21-year-olds. I know he got criticized for playing on the periphery and all that stuff. He did. He's got to commit to being a professional and focusing on the game. Simple as that. He does that, we don't expect him to be crashing and banging. Just play your game." Chiarelli was said to be looking at trade options for the winger Sunday. MATT BURKE
